NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Composed in 1887, Dvořák's Romantic Pieces for Violin and Piano were intended as "parlor pieces," and were first conceived for strings alone. Soon after the pieces were finished, Dvořák undertook a rather extensive revision for solo violin and piano. The rewritten version became the final draft upon which this arrangement is based. The violin I and II, viola, and bass parts are all playable in first position; cello goes to third position. As the title suggests, expressive legato playing within the ensemble gives students the opportunity to develop their bow control. The piano part requires a clean and crisp approach.
