NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

The groove for Lago del Oeste is an Afro-Cuban cha-cha. (It should not be confused with the American/Latin dance from the 1940s and '50s.) Executing this groove is the main objective of the rhythm section, as the feel and pulse must remain energized. The intensity of the repetitive rhythm figures is crucial. It will take some focus for rhythm players to grasp the effectiveness of the repetition. For an aural understanding of the groove, I suggest the ensemble, and especially the rhythm section, listen to the demo recording of this chart at alfred.com/downloads. Or, check out any classic Tito Puente or Poncho Sanchez recording—the Afro-Cuban groove is truly infectious. And that's the beauty of this music . . . find something that works, and stick to it; in this case, the repetitive yet intense rhythmic groove.

The written parts work great if read "as is."

Horn players pay close attention to the articulations. The staccato notes should be crisp and clean, but not too short or clipped. It is essential that each wind player focuses on the articulation—uniformity is critical. At m. 91, the low brass and rhythm also have marcato, or rooftop (▲), accents. The rooftop accents are played detached, accented, and for their full-value. Pay attention to other specific articulations combining slurs and short notes throughout the chart—focus!

Soloing on this tune can be quite easy. The chord progression is 2-bars long with only three chords: concert G minor, C (major), and G (major). The G blues scale (G, B♭, C, C♯, D, and F) will work great over the entire progression. You can also try the G minor pentatonic scale (G, B♭, C, D, and F). Each scale can become a bit repetitious, so consider blending the two scales. The C and D chords provide movement to get back to the "home-base" chord of G minor.

In the section at mm. 91–116, the drummer can be more aggressive in fact almost soloing in this section. However, always maintain accurate time and feel. Then, in m. 116, drums should be totally silent until the "and" of beat 4 into m. 118. The rhythm section parts are notated, but when the guitarist has slashes, he or she may consider comping with the same rhythm notated in mm. 6–8.

Please enjoy!
