NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

This version of Pure Imagination is like none you have ever heard before! An exciting opener or closer for any advanced jazz ensemble, the arrangement builds intensity by weaving through unexpected feels and time changes. The elements that make the performance engaging and rewarding also make this piece challenging.

Before reading down the arrangement, it is helpful to work with the rhythm section on the groove for the opening measures. It is important that the pianist stays on top of the beat and plays the rhythm accurately. If your pianist is having difficulty, the left hand can be omitted, as it is being doubled on bass. The drummer should be playing aggressively. For reference, listen and compare it to the drum pattern in "Teen Town" by Weather Report. You can also listen to the demo recording by the Elliot Deutsch Big Band at alfred.com/downloads.

The first solo is in the piano part, but it can be given to another instrument if desired. However, I suggest giving this solo to a player with strong bebop chops. The segue between the piano solo and the trumpet solo should be the dynamically loudest moment in the chart. The trumpets are playing written high E's while the trombones are playing loud power chords beneath. This passage is meant to be raucous and should be performed with that intent.

Measure 143 begins the trumpet solo. If your performance necessitates opening up the song for additional solos, this is the place to do that. Save the backgrounds for the last time on the last solo only. The background figures lead into the solo break. The section at m. 161, which is the last part of the trumpet solo, should continue the forward momentum. Be careful that the rhythm section hits the swing feel at m. 161 with the same energy, but save a bit of gas for the shout at m. 170. The section at m. 170 is the arrangement's pinnacle and should be played as a true fortissimo.

Finally, there is no ritard. at the end of the piece. If you decide to add one, it should only be a slight ritard. at the end of m. 192.

Thank you for purchasing and playing this arrangement. I am sure that with ample preparation, it will be a fun and rewarding piece for your performers.
