NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Lush Life is a jazz standard composed by Billy Strayhorn. The majority of the song was composed when Strayhorn was only sixteen years old. After its debut in 1948, it quickly became a favorite tune of musicians. The song's most notable recordings include those by Nat King Cole and John Coltrane. Most recently, Tony Bennett and Lady Gaga included this wonderful melody in their recent collaboration.

In my arrangement, the melodic material is shared between all sections of the ensemble. Trumpets are asked to either use flugelhorns or play in the stand for the majority of the chart. If flugelhorns are not available, players could also experiment with using bucket mutes instead of playing in the stand. The introduction is inspired by pianist Bruce Barth's playing and arrangement of this song for trumpet great Terell Stafford's recording This Side of Strayhorn. The trumpet melody in the introduction should be forefront to the accompaniment figures of the ensemble.

At m. 6, the saxophones state the first section of the tune. This passage should be played in an expressive manner, and the tempo should be a bit flexible to allow this to occur. Listening to great performances of this tune, like the previously mentioned artists, will aide players in developing a sense of how to approach this passage in an expressive manner. The trumpets (on flugelhorns) take over the melody at m. 15 with ensemble accompaniment. The drums are on brushes throughout this passage but need to change to sticks quickly at the beginning of m. 26. At the end of this measure, the drums set up the ensuing double-time bossa nova passage that begins in m. 27.

At m. 31, a small group of alto 1, trumpet 2, guitar, and optional vibes states the melody. From mm. 31–46, proper balance should be maintained so that these instruments can be clearly heard stating the melody. Measure 47 begins a trombone section soli of the melody. This passage should build to beat 4 of m. 53 where the full ensemble converges from a rhythmical standpoint. Measure 55 begins the final section of the tune, and the ensemble should build to the  $\frac{11}{8}$  figure in mm. 60–61. The piano, guitar, bass, and optional vibes state the next phrase, and then the full ensemble presents the final phrase of the song. The ending should gradually slow down beginning in m. 68 and continue until the final chord.

I highly encourage students to not only listen to historically significant recordings of this tune, but to also learn the lyrics (and to any great standard). Not only will the students have a sense of the phrasing, but they will have an understanding of the mood and meaning of this classic melody.

I suggest everyone listen to the demo recording of this chart at alfred.com/downloads, and check out a variety of other interpretations of this wonderful song—both instrumental and vocal versions.

Lush Life is one of the finest compositions of all time in my opinion, and I am humbled to present my interpretation of this standard for you and your students to study and perform.

Please enjoy!
